

Ancient Jewish and Christian Apocalypses: Transfer of Knowledge and Genre Definition

The conference aims at discussing how the literary genre "apocalypse" promoted specific domains of knowledge in Late Antiquity, such as eschatology, soteriology, angelology, demonology, ecclesiology, ethics and anthropology, and how it influenced Jewish and Christian concepts of the afterlife.

The colloquium is part of an ongoing research project that will eventually result in the publication of a new translation and commentary on all ancient apocalypses. Fifty-five texts have been selected based on the phenomenological definition of apocalyptic literature introduced by John J. Collins in 1979. These texts, composed up to the middle of the 8th century CE, have been distributed among forty philologists, historians, and theologians, who are examining them to determine what types of knowledge they transmit and how these types of knowledge are transformed by inclusion in the genre "apocalypse". The definition of the genre will then be central to the conversation.

In addition to keynote lectures by John J. Collins, Martha Himmelfarb and Jane Baun, the conference will include four sessions focusing on different research questions:

- 1. Defining the Genre
- 2. Mapping Jewish and Christian Traditions
- 3. Identifying Characteristics of Late Apocalypses
- 4. Transmission of Knowledge in Apocalyptic Literature.

Each participant will discuss his or her text in at least one of the sessions, providing initial answers to the proposed questions in a short talk. It is expected that a modified definition of "apocalypse" and an inventory of the types of knowledge reflected in early and late apocalyptic texts will emerge by the end of the conference.
